

Dr Siobhan Trevallyan

Dr Siobhan Trevallyan graduated from the University of Auckland in 2000, with a medical degree and a PhD in neuroanatomy. She moved quickly into primary care, valuing the team based and flexibility of general practice. She is an experienced GP, currently working in a high needs practice in West Auckland. Her experience includes all aspects of primary care, practice management and quality improvement.

Experience working with high needs patients has reinforced her interest in reducing inequity in health. Within her practice, the team specifically target patients with addiction, mental health, and complex medical needs. She is passionate about nurse led care, and practice improvement through process design. The rising awareness of transgender medicine, and care for those within the transgender community, has led to the practice developing a niche interest in this area. The medical and social needs of this community are complex, and require specific care and systems support.

Through her presentation, she hopes to increase knowledge and confidence in the administrative and basic medical needs of patients through their transition and long term care.
